THE MIDDLE AGES

On some page of this record you will find your name listed with those of your brothers and sisters and your parents.

If you are interested and, no doubt, you will be, you can trace your ancestry by aid of these charts and data back to Robert de Bruce, King Robert I of Scotland.

Measured by present day standards, we might well blush because of his shortcomings as a man, but as a king he gave his subjects no cause to blush for him. As king he reigned with dignity, heroic courage and wise discrimination, always desiring peace with England, yet he would not stoop to dishonorable terms to attain it.

We are deeply indebted to Hattie Shinn for records of early generations as given in her "Tribute to Our Ancestors" published late in the Nineteenth Century.

For a great mass of data which enables us to connect up loose ends in the early and incomplete records of the Scifres and Munden branch, we acknowledge our gratitude to our Mother (Sarah Jane Munden Scifres) and Alpheus Lochman Munden, her brother.

Warm acknowledgment for their kind assistance is returned to those who furnished their immediate family records and searched out others where possible.

Robert de Bruce, Eighth Lord of Annandale, Earl of Carrick and King of Scotland, was the eighth in direct male descent from Robert de Bruce (or Brus) who accompanied William the Conqueror to England in 1066.

Robert de Bruce, Eighth Lord of Annandale, was born in Scotland, July 11, 1274. He led the Scots in the fight for independence from English rule. Victory for the Scots came with the decisive Battle of Bannockburn in 1314. He came to the throne as King Robert I of Scotland following this successful revolution. He died in Scotland, June 7, 1329. His first wife was Isabel de Mar. His second wife was Elizabeth de Burgh, daughter of the Earl of Ulster.

The Bruce Line of Milroy is not further considered here.

Many members of the Wilson Line are given mere mention in this record because of meager data available. This made it possible, by condensing old records, to reach early in this volume the Wilson - Scifres - Munden branches and to record information on members of these branches even to the last born.

Joseph Scifres (1809-1874)* who married Rebecca Ellen Wilson (granddaughter of Elizabeth Bruce Wilson) was of Welsh descent. A few years ago there were families bearing the name - spelled S-c-i-f-r-e-s - living in Wales. The interesting, but trying, task of contacting our Welsh cousins may someday be undertaken by some painstaking member of our group.

The first line of Jones is not further considered here.

Many members of the Jones line are given and named in this record because of origin and descent. This may be possible, by comparison with old records, to trace early in this volume the Wilson - Jones line. It is to record information on matters of these records even to the last date.

Joseph Jones (1692-1754) who married Rebecca (1692-1754) daughter of Robert Jones (1692-1754) was of Welsh descent. A few years ago there were 100000 people in Wales - 100000 people - living in Wales. The interesting, but trying, task of collecting which consists of a number of some interesting records of our group.
